Leicester College student Daniel Staruch was recently given the opportunity to go on a week-long work placement with Henry Boot Construction Limited.

Henry Boot Construction are currently working on The University of Leicester's Brookfield Campus. The project, worth around £8m, will see a comprehensive renovation of the site, including the main house, to create a new home for the University's School of Business.

The work placement gave Daniel the chance to spend time on a live construction site, to gain valuable new skills as well as experience of working with a wide range of people from different backgrounds. Sandra Rieger, who organised the placement as part of the Council's Constructing Leicester initiative, said: "Through the Employment Hub, we are able to offer students the opportunity to get first-hand experience of construction sites."

Adeana Raper, Employment & Skills Manager at Henry Boot Construction said: "We are pleased to provide work experience for local students. The construction industry needs young people for jobs in every facet of the industry." Henry Boot Construction's Site Managers Jack Duncan and Nick Hobbs, added: "We are delighted to have offered this opportunity to Daniel and we wish him continued success in his chosen career path."

"I just want to thank Henry Boot for taking me on, teaching and giving me experience to join in the construction industry.

This will 100% help me with my future career goals as I have learnt much about how the construction process operates.

I am very grateful."
